

About the Program

The Indiana University Maurer School of Law Direct Admission program allows undergraduate students enrolled at Indiana University—Bloomington to apply for admission to the law school prior to their senior year. This program is open to prospective law students with exemplary academic records who have identified Indiana Law as their first choice for obtaining a legal education.

In order to facilitate a more streamlined application process and forge an early connection with future students who maintain such close physical proximity, the Law School will waive the LSAT requirement for students maintaining an undergraduate GPA of 3.85 or better.

Applicants are required to complete, in its entirety, the balance of our application along with other materials outlined in the “Instructions” section of this Agreement. The applicant will also be asked to interview with the Law School’s Admissions Office. The application fee will be waived for students applying through this program.

We hope that this effort will strengthen our connection with the undergraduate campus and help create a transition year when students can be involved with both communities.

Unsuccessful Direct Admit applicants may apply to Indiana University Maurer School of Law at any point in the future.
