Stewart Fellows working in nine countries this summer

Twenty-three law students are working summer in nine different countries -- including, for the first time, Cambodia -- as part of the Stewart Fellows Overseas Externship Program. The unique program is offered through the school's Milt and Judi Stewart Center on the Global Legal Profession. "While we started with just a handful of terrific students in India and China back in 2010, we have expanded to nine countries, including the key emerging market of Cambodia this summer," said Prof. Jay Krishnan, the center's director. "Our students have so many wonderful supporters, including, notably, the Stewarts, and we are grateful to everyone who has helped make this program successful." Read more about this year's Stewart Fellows and where they're working.

Ochoa named director of IU's Latin American Gateway

Prof. Christy Ochoa has been named the director of Indiana University's newest Gateway, located in Mexico City. Ochoa, the Law School's associate dean for research and faculty affairs, has worked for a number of human rights and non-governmental organizations in Colombia, Brazil, and Nicaragua, and produced a documentary film on the complexities of gold mining in a small Colombian town. IU has identified Mexico as one of 30 priority countries the university is seeking to enhance relations with as it carries out the mission of its international strategic plan. That plan calls for increasing academic and research collaborations -- including faculty and student exchanges -- with Latin America's leading educational and cultural institutions. Ochoa, Krishnan, and Dean Austen Parrish, among others, met with several alumni and academic partners during a trip to Mexico City in late June. Ochoa was also appointed associate dean this month, along with Prof. Aviva Orenstein, who was named associate dean for academic affairs.

Goff, '96, tapped for Indiana Supreme Court

For the first time since 1951, the majority of Indiana Supreme Court justices are alumni of the Maurer School of Law. That milestone comes after Indiana Gov. Eric Holcomb selected the Hon. Christopher Goff, '96, to fill the seat vacated by Justice Robert D. Rucker, who retired May 12. "To select a member of our state's highest court is a great responsibility, one I am humbled to make on behalf of Indiana's citizens," Gov. Holcomb said. "I am glad to share that we have an outstanding appointment in Christopher Goff. He has profound respect for the Constitution and the rights and principles embodied within it. What's more, he is a critical, forward thinker with the ability to relate to everyday Hoosiers. These qualities make him uniquely qualified to serve." Goff was appointed to the Wabash County Superior court in 2005, where he maintains a general civil and criminal docket. A date for Goff's robing ceremony will be determined by the Indiana Supreme Court soon. Goff joins Chief Justice Loretta H. Rush, '83, and Hon. Geoffrey Slaughter, '89, as the third Indiana Law alum on the bench.

New joint initiative on civil justice, legal aid space may be state's first

A joint initiative put forth by Prof. Victor Quintanilla will see the Law School's Center for Law, Society, and Culture partner with two other IU entities in an effort to assess and address the pressing and unmet legal needs of the state's low-income population. Quintanilla hopes the project will also examine the current legal services delivery system to determine rural and underserved communities' access to those services, determine ways to improve resource allocation, and review effective nationwide programs that will help address the most prevalent legal needs of low-income Hoosiers identified during the research process. The project, in collaboration with the IU Public Policy Institute and the IU Center for Urban and Regional Excellence, is believed to be the first statewide endeavor of its kind.
